Sources/Interpretations for use with Section B.

Source B: A photograph taken outside the German National Bank, Berlin in 1923. It shows businessmen loading baskets of banknotes onto a vehicle during the hyperinflation crisis.

Source C: From a speech by Hitler in a Munich beer hall, 8 November 1923.

'A national revolution has started. This hall is surrounded, no one may leave the building. The government of the Weimar Republic, led by the November criminals, has been overthrown. We have occupied the bases of the army and the police.

A new government will be announced in Munich. A new German National Army will be formed immediately. The task of the new German government in Munich is to organise the march on Berlin and save the German people! Tomorrow there will either be a new National Government in Germany instead of the Weimar Republic or we will have failed and be dead!'

Interpretation 1: From Weimar and Nazi Germany by C Hinton and J Hite, published in 2000.

> The hyperinflation crisis had major economic effects that weakened the Weimar Republic. The government needed to print money to pay wages to civil servants, pay welfare benefits and to help industry.
>
> It was the final blow for an already weakened German currency when 60,000 French and Belgian troops occupied the Ruhr in January 1923. The government called for passive resistance and strikes but this meant the government's income fell while government spending on welfare increased.

Interpretation 2: From The Weimar Republic by E Kolb, published in 2004.

> The government of the Weimar Republic had to cope with a period of extreme political difficulty. In autumn 1923, as the political crisis worsened, the government announced a state of emergency throughout Germany.
>
> In November, when a political meeting was being held in a beer hall in Munich, Hitler burst in, with his armed SA (brownshirt) troopers. He declared the local government and the national government would be replaced.
