SOURCE B

Contemporary photograph of Freikorps paramilitaries, Berlin, March 1920

From a photograph published in a German newspaper, March 1920. It shows soldiers of the rebel Marinebrigade Ehrhardt occupying the government quarter in Berlin during the Kapp Putsch, with swastikas painted on their helmets.

Armed Freikorps soldiers sit in transport lorries outside the Reichstag building in Berlin. When President Friedrich Ebert ordered the regular German Army to suppress the nationalist uprising, General Hans von Seeckt refused, declaring: "Reichswehr does not fire on Reichswehr." The elected republican government was forced to flee the capital to Dresden and Stuttgart.

SOURCE C

Contemporary photograph of children playing with bundled cash, Berlin, autumn 1923

From a photograph taken in Berlin, autumn 1923. It shows German children building toy pyramids with tightly bound stacks of banknotes that had become virtually worthless during the hyperinflation crisis.

By November 1923, hyperinflation had completely shattered the German currency: a single US dollar was valued at 4.2 trillion paper marks, and a basic loaf of bread cost 201 billion marks. Millions of ordinary middle-class Germans saw their life savings, pensions, and insurance policies wiped out overnight, forcing families to barter possessions for food.

HISTORICAL INTERPRETATIONS 1 AND 2

Target: How and why historians differ (AO4)

INTERPRETATION 1

From an account by historian Richard J. Evans, The Coming of the Third Reich (2003)

"The gravest challenges confronting the early Weimar Republic were political violence, extremist insurrections, and the open disloyalty of the army. From the outset, the republic was assaulted by armed uprisings from both the extreme left and the extreme right. The Kapp Putsch of March 1920 demonstrated that the regular military could not be relied upon to defend the constitution, while nationalist assassination squads murdered over three hundred political figures, including Foreign Minister Walther Rathenau. It was this violent lawlessness that brought the republic to the verge of collapse."

INTERPRETATION 2

From an account by historian Mary Fulbrook, A History of Germany 1918–2014 (2014)

"The Weimar Republic was shaken far more profoundly by economic catastrophe than by right-wing putsches. The crippling burden of reparations, exacerbated by the French occupation of the Ruhr in January 1923, triggered hyperinflation that completely destroyed the German currency. The economic collapse wiped out the life savings, pensions, and financial security of the respectable middle class. This alienated millions of ordinary citizens from the democratic system, leaving a permanent legacy of bitterness and cynicism towards the republic."

Presidential Emergency Decree under Article 48, Berlin, December 1931

From an official emergency decree signed by President Paul von Hindenburg and Chancellor Heinrich Brüning, published in the German legal gazette, December 1931.

"On the basis of Article 48 of the Reich Constitution, the following is decreed to secure the economy and finances: All public sector wages and salaries are reduced by ten percent. Unemployment relief payments are strictly curtailed. Prices of essential goods are reduced by decree." By ruling through presidential decree rather than parliament, Chancellor Brüning became known as the 'Hunger Chancellor', driving millions of desperate Germans towards radical political parties.

By July 1932, the SA numbered over 400,000 men—four times the size of the regular German Army. Their disciplined parades, martial brass bands, and street brawls with the Communist Rotfrontkämpferbund presented an image of dynamic youth, strength, and order to middle-class voters terrified of Bolshevik revolution during the Great Depression.

HISTORICAL INTERPRETATIONS 1 AND 2

Target: How and why historians differ (AO4)

INTERPRETATION 1

From an account by historian William Carr, A History of Germany 1815–1990 (1991)

"The Nazi Party grew into a mass movement primarily because the Great Depression shattered the economic and social foundations of the Weimar Republic. With six million Germans unemployed by 1932, millions of desperate middle-class voters, shopkeepers, and farmers turned to the NSDAP as the only radical alternative to Communism. In a democracy that had collapsed into economic paralysis, it was the despair produced by mass unemployment and Brüning's wage-cutting policies that drove voters in their millions to support Hitler."

INTERPRETATION 2

From an account by historian Richard J. Evans, The Coming of the Third Reich (2003)

"The rapid growth of Nazi support between 1929 and 1932 cannot be explained solely by economic distress. Other nations suffered mass unemployment without turning to fascism. What set the Nazis apart was their brilliant modern electioneering and Hitler's magnetic personal appeal. Goebbels orchestrated dynamic campaigns using aeroplanes, radio, and mass rallies, while the uniformed SA stormtroopers provided an intoxicating image of discipline and order on the streets. It was Nazi propaganda and paramilitary energy that captivated voters."

From an official address given by Dr. Joseph Goebbels to regional broadcasting directors in Berlin, March 1933, shortly after his appointment as Minister of Public Enlightenment and Propaganda.

"We make no bones about it: the radio belongs to us and to no one else! We will place radio in the service of our National Socialist idea, and no other idea shall be expressed here. Radio must be purged of all un-German elements. We intend to mobilize the minds of the entire nation so thoroughly that no foreign or hostile thought can find an audience."

SOURCE C

Contemporary photograph of the People's Radio (Volksempfänger VE301), Berlin, 1933

From an official photograph published in Germany, 1933. It shows the newly introduced Volksempfänger (People's Radio), commissioned by Joseph Goebbels.

The Volksempfänger was mass-produced to sell for only 76 Reichsmarks, roughly one week's wage for an average industrial worker. By 1939, over seventy percent of German households owned a radio set—the highest proportion in Europe. The sets were engineered with a limited shortwave receiver so that ordinary citizens could not easily listen to foreign broadcasts, ensuring that families heard only Nazi propaganda and Hitler's speeches.

HISTORICAL INTERPRETATIONS 1 AND 2

Target: How and why historians differ (AO4)

INTERPRETATION 1

From an account by historian David Welch, The Third Reich: Politics and Propaganda (2002)

"Nazi propaganda was remarkably successful in winning over the hearts and minds of the German people. Joseph Goebbels understood that propaganda could not rely solely on crude slogans; it had to appeal to existing national traditions and pride. Through the distribution of cheap 'People's Radios', the cinematic spectacles of Leni Riefenstahl, and the euphoric pageantry of the Nuremberg rallies, the regime created a genuine sense of national community (Volksgemeinschaft). For the majority of Germans between 1933 and 1939, conformity was based on genuine enthusiasm and admiration for Hitler rather than state coercion."

INTERPRETATION 2

From an account by historian Richard J. Evans, The Third Reich in Power (2005)

"The apparent unity of the German people was fundamentally an illusion created by the omnipresence of the terror state. While Goebbels' propaganda was loud and relentless, ordinary Germans were far more cynical and detached than official rallies suggested. What truly controlled attitudes was the constant threat of denunciation to the Gestapo, the pervasive network of SS surveillance, and the dread of protective custody in concentration camps like Dachau. Germans did not conform because they believed every word broadcast on the radio; they conformed because speaking out meant arrest, torture, and ruin."

JUN 1933 • Law for the Encouragement of Marriage

The Nazi state offers marriage loans of up to 1,000 marks to newlywed Aryan couples, provided the bride gives up her job. For each child born, 25% of the loan is permanently cancelled, boosting the national birth rate.

From the official Nazi Party newspaper, published the day after SA stormtroopers raided and dissolved all independent German trade unions, May 1933.

"German workers! Your trade unions were corrupted by Marxist class hatred. Today, the National Socialist state has liberated you! By order of the Führer, the German Labour Front (DAF) under Dr. Robert Ley has assumed leadership of all working Germans. They lived in military-style barracks, wore uniforms, and performed hard manual labour—draining wetlands, planting forests, and building motorways—for pocket money rather than a regular wage.

HISTORICAL INTERPRETATIONS 1 AND 2

Target: How and why historians differ (AO4)

INTERPRETATION 1

From an account by historian Richard Grunberger, A Social History of the Third Reich (1971)

"For the vast majority of German industrial workers, the Nazi era brought tangible improvements in everyday life. Unemployment was eliminated within four years, replacing the terror of the Great Depression with guaranteed employment and steady earnings. Through the 'Strength Through Joy' (KdF) organization, millions of ordinary workers enjoyed subsidised theatre tickets, sports facilities, and cruise holidays to Norway and Italy that had previously been the exclusive preserve of the rich. The 'Beauty of Labour' campaign renovated factory canteens, washrooms, and ventilation, creating genuinely improved working conditions."

INTERPRETATION 2

From an account by historian Tim Mason, Social Policy in the Third Reich (1993)

"The claim that German workers experienced a higher standard of living under National Socialism is thoroughly misleading. In return for full employment, workers surrendered all basic rights and freedoms. Real wages remained below 1928 levels while compulsory deductions for the Labour Front, winter relief, and state insurance consumed up to thirty percent of pay packets. Furthermore, the average working week rose from forty-three hours in 1933 to forty-seven hours in 1939. Stripped of the right to strike and tied to their jobs by the Labour Book, workers suffered declining living standards."
